Former CIA director Stansfield Turner will headne a University of Dayton speakers series this fall designed to spark discussion about on-campus CIA recruiting — an Issue that drew students to a sit-in protest earlier this year in the university president's office.

The speakers series, sponsored by the executive committee of UD's Academic Senate, is part of a process at UD of evaluating the intelligence agency's activities in light of Catholic teaching and values.

The series was prompted by the sit-in at UD President Brother Raymond L. Fitz's effice in February, which occurred during a CIA visit to interview UD students. The protesters' goal was to end CIA recruitment on campus.

Turner, a retired Navy admiral and former president of the Naval War College, served as CIA director from 1977 to 1981. He is the author of Secrecy and Democracy: The CIA in Transition. His presentation will be in the Kennedy Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. Tuesday.

The Academic Senate will make recommendations on CIA recruitment to Provost Brother Joseph W. Stander by Dec. 16. Fitz will decide by early January whether CIA recruiting will be allowed on campus.
